

Permit Required Confined Space Work, Respirator Use & LOTO Training Class

About 1.6 million american workers enter confined spaces and far too many of them die every year. The OSHA standard 29 CFR 1910.146 developed to protect those works from possible engulfment and from toxic, explosive or asphyxiating atmospheres focuses on areas with immediate health or safety risks. These are the so called permit-required confined spaces. Many workplaces contain areas that are considered to be "permit-required confined spaces" and the employees who deal with these spaces need additional training to work safely in them. This class is a general overview for those who may be dealing with permit-required confined spaces.
